Honors II Community in Murphree Hall

Overview
The Honors II Community is a living-learning community that provides a small-knit community for upper-class honors students. Residents live in one section of Murphree Hall housing around 30 students and located near the heart of the academic part of campus. Residents participate in honors events, learn about research opportunities, and develop presentation skills.

Program Goals

- Promote involvement with the campus community through residence hall activities, student organizations, and interaction with faculty, staff, and other students.
- Provide additional opportunities for informal out-of-class interactions between honors students and faculty.
- Provide opportunities to participate in activities that enhance the Undergraduate Experience.
  - Participate in leadership opportunities.
  - Involvement in community service.
  - Study abroad.
  - Conduct research.
  - Complete an internship

Academic Resources

- Classroom space: Murphree Commons offers a multimedia classroom for Honors classes and group study
- Study space: There is a small conference room in Murphree Commons and some quiet space in the Fletcher library. Both are frequently available for individual or small group study during the day and on some evenings.
- Other programs include study buddies and exam review sessions.

How Do I Participate?

The Honors II Community is restricted to upper-class students in the honors program. Current honors students will receive information in December about signing up for the community for the next year.
